Both the oldest and newest records show infrequent changes were from a core group of the total developers. This small subset of developers includes users Scott Alexander-Bown and Matthew Rollings. They have interacted with both source and test code consistently throughout the repository's lifetime and are responsible for most changes before week 20 and after week 300.

This repository appears to have been maintained over its nearly 6-year life span. Despite the varied developer participation, this repository's history is as expected for a public project that has might have previously peaked but is now mature or obsolete.

Useful git commands utilized during this lab include git status -b, git branch, and git checkout. These commands were key in navigating git branches.
